Work has started on the $6 million project to improve the lower portion of the Provo Canyon Road and Orem's 800 N. and once blasting starts next week there could be traffic delays of 30 minutes.

"There will definitely be traffic slow downs because we are going to have to do an awful lot of blasting up here. Those delays could last up to a half-an-hour, because there's no other place for the debris to fall except on the road," said Larry Buss, project engineer for the Utah Department of Transportation.

The work from the Murdock Diversion Canal south to the Canyon Road/800 North intersection is the first part of a project to upgrade all of U.S. 189 through Provo Canyon. "This is just the first section of the project. I've heard that they expect to have the next section contracted out
